Special Properties handles their clients' homes with the utmost care, expertise and discretion, and the company's agents are specially trained to do the same with their clients' other valuable assets.

In addition to marketing properties, Christie's Special Properties real estate agents connect customers with services of the auction house, including appraisals for fine art, antiques, furniture, estate jewelry, watches and handbags. No other luxury real estate business shares common ownership with a fine art auction house.

"Christie's Special Properties has the unique ability to extend to buyers and sellers of real estate the expert service that Christie's art clients have trusted for centuries. Through this powerful connection, we open the door to an extraordinary global audience of qualified individuals," said Sonja Cullaro, Executive Vice President of Special Properties Real Estate.

Because of its connection with the auction house, Special Properties is able to provide complimentary valuations and consignment opportunities at their state-of-the-art local offices. If customers would like a complimentary valuation of their valuables, specialists from Christie's are available on-site in a private and confidential setting to provide their expert valuations. "Christie's is the best place to start, especially when one doesn't know what they have. If they have items of value or believe that they are sitting on a hidden treasure, it is a great opportunity to get an expert opinion and find out what the market value is," said Cullaro.

As an exclusive affiliate of Christie's International Real Estate, Special Properties Real Estate Services is part of an esteemed network which connects buyers and sellers of the world's most important properties. The company is driven by the global span and expertise of the Christie's network, which extends to more than 1,200 offices with 32,000 agents in 45 countries and combined annual sales of approximately $118 billion. Christie's unique international perspective in the worlds of art, luxury and real estate, together with the company's unparalleled service, has made Christie's and its affiliates the global authority in marketing properties
